12. Educational aims of the programme

The academic standards for Master's Awards in Business and Management stress the importance of professional development to the health and productivity of the UK and global economies. The purpose of this programme is to develop and enhance the practice of sustainable Human Resource Management and its potentially significant contribution to global business.

In particular, the MSc in Human Resource Management aims to provide students with the opportunity to develop their understanding of this wider business context and develop their Human Resource Management understanding and skills. In addition, the international context will be at the forefront in all modules, allowing students to explore and investigate the core content in a multicultural and global setting.

Students will develop the knowledge and abilities necessary to deal with a diverse range of people within the confines of the employment relationship, both nationally and internationally. Indeed, the programme will use the diverse student backgrounds to encourage cross-learning within the cohorts in terms of Human Resource Management practices from around the world. The three themes of internationalisation, employability and sustainability are central to the programme design and to the students' experience.

Specific exposure to the international business context will be provided through links to live case studies to enable students to gain an appreciation of real business contexts. Further exposure to relevant practice will happen through the internship pathway which is available as an option to all students. More details about the internship option is available in the learning, teaching and assessment section.

Sustainability and sustainable development will be explored throughout the course to enable students to develop a critical understanding and awareness of operating as a leader in sustainable and ethical business.

Students can select from a menu of optional modules to customise their degree and focus on their personal career goals. Flexibility is also provided through the structure of the course as students can join the course at two entry points each year.

The aims are as follows:

1. Provide the appropriate Human Resource knowledge and skills to manage in a range of national and global settings;
2. Provide the range of skills and knowledge required by Human Resource professionals within an organisational context;
3. Promote an appropriate pathway for the development of professional HR careers;
4. Develop the capacity of students to manage their own learning and development thus becoming 'reflective practitioners';
5. Develop the power of critical enquiry, logical thought, creative imagination and independent judgement in a context of application and research;
6. Develop and consolidate informed professional and ethical competence across a range of subject specialisms.

These aims fit with the benchmark standards detailed in the Master's Awards in Business and Management (QAA revised 2015) which are:

- The advanced study of organisations, their management and the changing external context in which they operate;
- Preparation for and/or development of a career in human resource management by developing skills at a professional level or as preparation for research or further study in the area;
- Development of the ability to apply knowledge and understanding of human resource management to complex issues, both systematically and creatively, to improve business and management practice;
- Enhancement of lifelong learning skills and personal development to be able to work with self-direction and originality and to contribute to the business at large.

Learning, teaching and assessment

The programme is designed to develop an independent learning culture that will allow the student to be able to take learning from their programme of study and apply it systematically in a range of work and organisational settings. In this way the MSc is very focussed on the workplace and, where possible, students are encouraged to ground their learning with any experience of the workplace. The learning & teaching strategies employed demonstrate this synergy. They include case studies on real organisations to examine problem-based learning, blended learning from the Virtual learning Environment, group work simulating real-life business contexts, and, where appropriate, engaging with real business problems and delivering solutions to real business issues. These provide an effective link between theory, its application, and the development of well-rounded future Human Resource managers and leaders capable of working in a range of organisational contexts nationally and internationally.

An optional internship (up to 6 months in duration) is available to all students, taking place on completion of the taught modules. This internship will not be credit-rated but will allow the student to gain first-hand experience within a real business environment to enhance their future employability. Students may also choose to make use of this opportunity to base their Research Project on a business-related issue arising during the internship. There may be possibilities, with the employer's permission, to gain access to research participants and primary data, and to apply their understanding of theories and principles discussed within their programme to a live organisational setting.

Additionally, grounding is gained through the dissection, discussion, and interpretation of case studies; opportunities to work on live client projects/briefs; interaction with guest speakers and networking events with business leaders provided at local venues and at the Business School, other Universities and through the Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development.

Teaching

Students are taught through a combination of interactive workshops, lectures, seminars, laboratory practical sessions, organisational fieldwork, practical activities, etc. Interactive workshops take a variety of formats and are intended to enable the application of learning through discussion and small group activities. Seminars enable the discussion and development of understanding of topics covered in lectures, and laboratory practical sessions are focused on developing subject specific skills and applied individual and group project work. Wherever possible, students are to reflect on their knowledge, experience and practice and to think creatively of potential solutions that impact positively on business performance and professional practice.

In addition, meetings with Personal Academic Tutors (PATs) are scheduled on three occasions during the year. Meetings are also scheduled with the Research Project supervisors are scheduled throughout the execution of the project.

The University places emphasis on enabling students to develop the independent learning capabilities that will equip them for lifelong learning and future employment, as well as academic achievement. A mixture of independent study, teaching and academic support from Student Services and Library Services, and also the Personal Academic Tutoring system enables students to reflect on progress and build up a profile of skills, achievements and experiences that will help them to flourish and be successful.

Contact time

Each module will have a weekly session of two hours. In a typical week full time students will have around 8 contact hours of teaching. For part time students, this will depend on the number of modules being taken. Typically, class contact time will be structured around:

- Delivering theoretical content to address contemporary marketing issues
- Practical tasks relating theory to practice
- Discussions and group activities
- Case studies and other exercises

Independent self-study

In addition to the contact time, a full time student is expected to undertake around 30 hours of personal self-study per week, making this equivalent in total with contact time to working full time. Typically, this will involve reading, researching, preparing for group work, rehearsing presentations, preparing for assessments and exams.

Independent learning is supported by a range of excellent learning facilities, including the Hive and library resources, the virtual learning environment, and extensive electronic learning resources.

Teaching staff

Students will be taught by a teaching team whose expertise and knowledge are closely matched to the content of the modules on the course.

Teaching is informed by research and consultancy, and most of lecturers on the course have a higher education teaching qualification or are Fellows of the Higher Education Academy.

Assessment

The course provides opportunities to test understanding and learning informally through the completion of practice or 'formative' assignments. Each module has one or more formal or 'summative' assessment which is graded and counts towards the overall module grade.

The precise assessment requirements for an individual student in an academic year will vary according to the mandatory and optional modules taken, but a typical formal summative assessment pattern, for a FT student is:

Semester 1:

- 1 Research proposal
- 1 Exam
- 2 individual reports
- 1 Group presentation
- 1 Essay

Semester 2:

- 1 Group presentation
- 1 Reflective essay
- 1 Individual report

Semester 3:

- Research Project

The precise assessment requirements for PT students will vary according to the modules selected.

All assignments will be internally marked and moderated as well as being externally examined as per the UW assessment policy.

14. Assessment strategy

The Assessment strategy has been designed to provide students with challenges appropriate for Masters of level modules. The programme is assessed through a range of summative coursework including presentations, case study, and assignments. Formative feedback will be provided by a range of approaches coherent with the peer focused nature of the programme; it will include feedback from tutors and students.

The overall purpose of the assessment strategy is to enable students to:

- Demonstrate that they have the intellectual rigour commensurate with a course of this nature and have developed the analytical skills expected of Master of Level study.
- Demonstrate the ability to synthesise appropriate theories, models and concepts from a range of modules studied on the course and apply them to critically evaluate real world scenarios
- Gain experience in working individually and as part of a team
- Maximise the opportunity to utilise and share their own experience(s) and studies to produce concise documents of the kind used in the management decision making process
- Receive continuous, regular and appropriate feedback throughout the course
- Develop the intellectual and practical abilities required of leaders and managers
- Exhibit creative and reflective ability in striving for continuous improvement, questioning ideas, testing traditional methods and received wisdom.

In designing the assessment strategy for the programme, the course team have been careful to align with the University's Assessment Policy and the University's Postgraduate (PGT) Grade Descriptors.

16. QAA and professional academic standards and quality

This award is located at Level 7 of the FHEQ and its design is influenced by the FHEQ qualification descriptor, QAA subject benchmark statement and the QAA Masters Degree Characteristics.

The MSc in Human Resource Management is designed to offer a type II award which provides a career development approach to the teaching of business and management subjects in a generalist area but with a strong practical and professional orientation to the curriculum.

Students will be able to reflect on and learn from any prior experience and thus be able to integrate new knowledge with past experience and apply it to new situations. However, Human Resource Management experience is not a pre-requisite and students will be provided with a variety of inputs in order to develop them as Human Resource leaders of the future. They will be able to challenge preconceptions and to remove subject and functional boundaries so as to handle complex situations holistically. They should also have particular strengths in analysing, synthesising and solving complex unstructured organisational problems. In addition to being able to communicate their findings, they should have developed the skills to implement agreed solutions effectively and efficiently. They should therefore have strongly developed interpersonal skills and to be able to interact effectively with a range of specialists.

This award has been designed to align with the professional standards of the Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development (CIPD) and the Chartered Institute of Management (CMI). The University is currently awaiting confirmation of accreditation (see Section 3).
