

Philosophy and Nursing: Where are we now?

16 November 2023

17.30 – 18.30 (UK time), Online seminar

Two free online events are planned to celebrate publication of the Routledge Handbook of Philosophy and Nursing. The first of these (scheduled for 16th November) asks “Where are we now?” regards philosophy and nursing. The second (30th November) looks ahead and asks where, regards philosophy and nursing, might we be ten years hence? Speakers at each event talk either to their chapter contributors and/or they draw on fresh thinking.

Please book your free place by completing our online form.

Event queries, please e-mail: j.fleet@worc.ac.uk

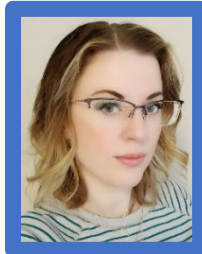

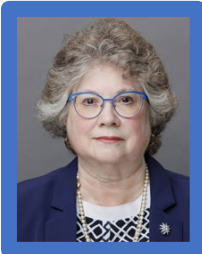

Mark Risjord – Philosophic thinking about, in, and for nursing: What forms does this thinking take, and does it help or contribute to practice?

Barbara Pesut – The essential role of logic, and in particular nursing logic, in preventing illogical (and worse tokenistic) approaches to equity and inclusion.

Denise J Drevdahl and Mary K Canales – Nursing’s professionalization project: Nursing education has advanced educational requirements (competencies, standards, essentials) as a means to ensure that nursing is seen as a profession. Denise and Mary consider the consequences of pursuing this project for those inside and outside the discipline.

Lousie Racine and Helen Vandenberg – Is anti-intellectualism fostered in nursing education? Louise and Helen explore this question to create awareness about the impact of anti-intellectualism on nursing as a scientific discipline. Exploring the context that cultivates its influence, they suggest anti-intellectualism impoverishes nursing thought.

